Happy Spring!

So far 2018 is shaping up to be a busy year for the early years community. We have been able to offer several training events including Infant Mental Health webinars, Appetite for Play, Motivational Interviewing and a Responsible Adult in Child Care Settings course. This spring, CCRR will continue to offer a variety of workshops including more webinars, Signing for child care providers, a felting workshop, Equitas training, and a rebroadcast of the ECE BC conference keynote address. Please see inside the newsletter for details.

Several communities around the province have created a children's charter of rights consisting of their own voices, and during the next few months the Sunshine Coast will begin work on our very own locally made charter. To help prepare child care providers to gather input from their children, CCRR will be hosting a workshop with Equitas, Canada's most recognized and active human rights education organization. Details are on page 6. The whole project will take several months and CCRR staff will be available to support child care centres who wish to participate.

The BC 2018 provincial budget has introduced initiatives to help make child care affordable for families across the province. Beginning April 1st, child care providers who sign up for the Child Care Operating Fund will receive funding to help reduce fees for families. More information and links are on page 3.

May is child care month and once again the CCRR is honouring the hard work and commitment of our local child care community. All child care providers, family resource workers and Strong Start staff are invited to join us at the Sechelt Art Gallery on Wednesday, May 23rd for a fun evening of dinner, crafts and a guest speaker. Stay tuned for further details.

Next month, CCRR will conduct our annual client satisfaction survey. We look forward to your comments and suggestions and find them helpful as we plan for the coming fiscal year. There will be a draw for a gift certificate for those who participate.

We hope you all have a Happy Easter! We're doing our sun dance and keeping our fingers crossed for some warm and sunny weather. Please note that CCRR offices will be closed on Good Friday (March 30th) and Easter Monday (April 2nd).

Catherine, Tracy and Katie

Changes to Child Care and the BC Government's Commitment to Universal Child Care

Major changes are happening in funding for child care. Budget 2018 takes action to make child care more affordable by:

- Introducing a new affordable child care benefit that will reduce child care costs by up to $1,250 per month per child and support 86,000 B.C. families per year by 2020/21.
- Providing up to $350 per month directly to licenced child care providers to reduce fees for an estimated 50,000 families per year by 2020/21.

For information regarding Budget 2018 and Government's commitment to universal child care, please visit <http://gov.bc.ca/childcare>

If you have questions regarding Child Care BC, Caring For Kids, Lifting up Families (https://www2.gov.bc.ca/assets/gov/family-and-social-supports/child-care/childcare_web.pdf) you can contact the Ministry of Children and Family Development at earlyyears@gov.bc.ca

For inquiries regarding the child care fee reduction initiative please contact the Child Care Operating Funding Program (<https://www2.gov.bc.ca/gov/content/family-social-supports/caring-for-young-children/running-daycare-preschool/child-care-operating-funding>) at mcf.ccof@gov.bc.ca or 1 888 338-6622.

Minor Capital Funding

Do you require emergency upgrades or repairs to your facility or replacement or repairs of flooring, fixtures or other eligible furnishings to comply with the Licensing Regulations within your Child Care Facility? Or are you relocating?

You may be eligible for up to $2,000.00 in Minor Capital Funding per facility (per physical address not per license).

Visit our website at www.gov.bc.ca/childcareminorcapitalfunding for details.

If you have any questions, please call the program toll free at 1 888-338-6622 option 5.

Inviting Family into the Classroom

By Kathreen Francis

While the primary training of a childcare professional appropriately focuses on the safety and education of young children, often too little attention is paid to the role of parents and family members—both as active participants and as part of the daily curriculum—in the early childhood classroom. After all, often the very reason that children are being cared for outside the home is because parents are at work (and therefore busy) or desire an outside social and learning experience for their children. However, it is critical to remember that parents are the “experts” on their own children and their presence, personally and through daily play and projects, should be viewed as a critical part of a child’s success. It is very important that families take a central role, and this can be encouraged by the attitude of the childcare professional and the curriculum used in the classroom.

Parents and guardians are often invited to take an active role in planning field trips, coordinating and gathering information for projects, volunteering in classrooms, and participating in an advisory capacity on boards or committees. Here are some other ideas you can easily incorporate into your program to bring the family into the classroom—both directly and through activities that allow children to think about their families frequently throughout the day.

Create a family-friendly environment! Simple additions like extra coat hooks and chairs, a message board, or a special area for family members to settle in and play with or read to a child offer obvious signs of welcome. Let parents know that their presence is expected and appreciated by showing them where books, craft items and toys are stored so they can participate spontaneously.

Communicate! Newsletters, emails, weekly notes, parent-teacher conferences, and daily conversations will keep parents connected to the classroom and the progress of their children. Teachers and parents should strive at all times to stay connected with one another, sharing any concerns or celebrating any successes the children experience.

Invite family members directly into the classroom to share hobbies, cultural traditions, special recipes, family pets, etc. This is not only a wonderful opportunity for the young child to see and take pride in her own family, and a terrific learning experience for the other children in your care, but it also tells families that their unique stories are appreciated and valued in the classroom.

Establish volunteer and social opportunities for families who have rigid work hours: after-work pot-lucks, craft preparation (which might include cutting or assembling), gardening, painting, fundraising, etc. Be creative and flexible. Don’t assume that a parent who is always in a hurry or barely makes it in on time for pickup is not interested in your program. Offer him a chance to help or socialize outside of business hours.

During the day you can also bring a child’s attention to her family and her place within it by the discussions and projects that you undertake in the classroom. Here are just a few of countless ways you can get started:

Make a collage! Allow children to cut (or choose pre-cut) and paste pictures of activities their families enjoy, pets that resemble their own, etc. to create a special collage. This will encourage a child to not only think about his family but also relate it to the bigger world. You might also try a collage using the traced and cut-out hands of family members. Help the children label the hands and then join them together, creating a beautiful visual tribute to the families in your care/ classroom.

Help children create a family tree. For very young children, this “tree” might simply be naming everyone in their immediate households and the others who are special to them—including pets, imaginary friends, and toys! A preschooler might enjoy the challenge of exploring another generation or two and including aunts, uncles, and cousins. Keep the tree simple and uncluttered and refer back to it frequently as a source of discussion. Update the trees with the births of siblings and cousins as the children share family news.

Using a small box or container covered in pretty paper, help each child craft a photo box with images of his home and family. This “family box” can be used to help soothe a child in need of comfort or as a tool to launch discussions specific to the child’s home interests.

Read good books! There are many, many excellent children's books that affirm the diversity of today's families. Recognize when choosing reading material that not every child may live in a traditional household, and make sure that your library reflects this. Choose books that represent a range of family types, including children living with grandparents or single heads of household, interracial families, foster families, etc. Be sensitive to family variety with any classroom project you undertake, but know that books give you a special opportunity to legitimize and support all families.

Helping the children in your program acknowledge and celebrate differences and similarities among families will help them create self-esteem, confidence, and healthy self-identity. So take the time to get to know your families. It will be a wonderful learning experience for everyone!

The Warrior Code - a Webinar Keynote Presentation plus Workshop

A webinar keynote presentation plus workshop from the 47th annual ECEBC conference: Navigating Our World Through the Lens of Early Childhood. It's Our Moment.

Presenter: Marc Battle

Saturday, May 12, 2018 9:00am – 12:00

Location: Sechelt CCRR, 5520 Trail Avenue

Cost: Free!

Suitable for: Child care providers and other ECE professionals.

3-hour professional development certificates will be issued.

Keynote: In this address, Marc will speak about how having an ECEs code of honour helps our profession uphold a code of ethics. He will challenge us to uphold our ethical duty to leave today better than tomorrow. Quality early childhood education and care programs provide a "marvelous staging ground" for children to learn to live as human beings in a community.

Workshop: Think about how you learned what your limits were or how far could you push your body and as a result painting a different image of yourself. How did you learn to negotiate with friends and say "no" to things that made you uncomfortable? How did you learn to take a chance on your ideas or your creativity? If everything is learned through experience, then many have learned these valuable skills through taking a risk. Yet we are bubble-wrapping our children and shielding them from the risks that we participated in and blinding ourselves to the consequences of these actions. This workshop will explore the kinds of risk in children's play, what they learn from it, and how we can allow children to risk safely.

Marc Battle is an ECE instructor at Red River College in Winnipeg, who also works with Aboriginal Head Start programs.

Upcoming Workshops and Training Opportunities

Felting a Fairy Cottage

Presenter: Natalie Grambow
June 4, 2018 6:30 – 9:30pm
Location: Gibsons CCRR
Cost: $25.00

Suitable for Early Childhood professionals and parents. 3 hr. pro-d certificates will be issued.
Fleece, materials and tools included in the workshop – participants should each bring a towel and a spray bottle

In this workshop, participants will learn how to create their own three-dimensional little fairy cottage to include in their magical stories, creating a natural environment to explore story-telling with soft, sensory props for a puppet play or to add to a fairy garden where children can ignite their imagination and create their own stories. During the workshop, we will cover needle felting techniques using naturally dyed sheep's wool fleece as well as some wet felting techniques. Participants will each take home their own beautifully crafted fairy cottage. No previous experience required.

Natalie Grambow works at Community Services as a Family Resource worker and is trained in early childhood and child development. In addition, she has also been trained in therapeutic story-telling and puppetry for young children. Natalie also has an extensive background in Textile Arts and has been teaching fiber arts workshop, story-telling for young children, puppetry and felting for many years.

Child Care Administration Corner: Are You “Opting In” for the new Child Care Fee Reduction Program?

The following is taken from the BC Government publication “Child Care BC: Frequently Asked Questions”

I’m a licensed provider – will I receive further operational supports through Budget 2018?

In addition to the funding for the child care fee reduction initiative, providers who choose to participate will be eligible for a lift in their CCOF base funding of 10% in 2018-19 to support operational expenses. This is the first increase in CCOF in 10 years.

I’m a licensed CCOF provider – how and when do I join?

When providers receive their 2018-19 contract for review, they will be able to join the new child care fee reduction initiative as part of their contract renewal. Information explaining the initiative will be posted on the program webpage and emailed to providers in the weeks leading up to contract renewal. Any questions about joining can be directed to the Child Care Operating Funding Program at 1-888-338-6622.

I’m a licensed provider – what if I don’t want to join?

At this time, the new initiative is optional, and providers can choose to participate at any time. However, the initiative provides funding to help providers reduce their parent fees, which will help to keep their program competitive with other programs in their community, while also supporting the families in their programs by providing them with a break in their monthly child care costs. In addition, participating providers will receive a 10% increase on their current CCOF base funding.

SUNSHINE COAST Children's Charter of Rights

What is it?

"The rights of the child are specific rights that aim to protect all human beings younger than 18 years old." (United Nations Convention on the Rights of a Child)

Basic human rights apply to all human beings regardless of their age. However, because of their vulnerability in our society, children need special, distinct rights that protect them. These rights apply no matter what the child's ethnic origin, religion, language, culture, or sex. They have the best interest of the child at heart, and they support the right to full healthy development. Furthermore, children have a right to express themselves about their own needs. They need to be heard.

Why have one?

Children's rights ensure that all children will have an opportunity to reach their full potential.

Creating the Sunshine Coast's very own Children's Charter will provide a specific list of rights for our children that reflects our geographic and cultural environment. This document can then be used as a cornerstone by community partners, leaders, agencies, and government to guide decision making and planning.

Rights can only be fully achieved when all of us (including children) recognize that every single one of us has them.

Over the next few months the Sunshine Coast Children's Charter Committee plans to develop a children's charter based on the voices of our children themselves. We will be engaging with community-based organizations that work directly with children. These professionals will be invited to attend training on facilitation and data gathering techniques, and then bring these techniques to their programs. They will then use these methods to engage with children and encourage them to express what their own rights shall be.
